JETERVILLE, Va., April 3.—Hon. William F. Jackson, aged sixty-three years, died Tuesday at his home near Oiga. His remains were interred Thursday at his old homestead, where many generations of his ancestors are buried. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Marshall White.

Retiring from the practice of his profession, he devoted the remainder of his life to farming. He was the first Democratic representative to the Legislature from Amelia county after the war. He was also county chairman of his party for a number of years. He served as a soldier in the Confederate Army during the entire war and was a prisoner at the close of hostilities.

Husband Makes Murderous Assault on Woman.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
ASHEVILLE, N. C., April 3.—While his wife lay ill, Lawrence Conley, who lives about three miles from Macon, attempted to kill her by slitting her throat with a razor. She is in a precarious condition, but may recover. Her ten-day-old child was in the bed with her when the attempt was made on her life, but was uninjured. Conley escaped and has not been seen since. Officers are searching for him. He was regarded as a peaceable character, and no motive for his act can be ascribed. As far as is known, the husband and wife had never quarreled. Mrs. Conley was a Miss Carpening and comes of a prominent family.

Mr. Duncan's purpose in buying the Industrial News is understood to be to resume the publication in Greensboro of a Republican State daily paper. It is rumored that J. P. Smith, of Raleigh, will be general manager of the business. It is not known who will be editor of the paper.

CHARGES OF CORRUPTION

Congressman Stevens Denounces
Court of Which Adams Was Chief Justice.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
GREENSBORO, N. C., April 3.—Will Judge Adams have a warrant charging libel issued and served on Congressman Stevens, who, on the floor of Congress, February of last year, made a speech in which he charged corruption of the Court of Indian Claims in Oklahoma, of which Adams was Chief Justice, and for the publication of extracts of which Marion Butler and Lester Butler, as reported editors of the Caucasian, which printed these charges, are now on trial here for criminal libel of Judge Adams? Judge Stevens had given a deposition strongly criticizing the court, and this deposition was read last night, but the court would not permit the speech delivered by Judge Stevens to be introduced as evidence.

This morning when court opened there was a fine-looking man sitting beside Mr. Justice, of counsel for defendants, and it proved none other than Judge Stevens himself, here in person to give evidence as to what he had denounced as cruel wrongs upon the Indians practiced by the court of which Judge Adams was Chief Justice.

When sworn as a witness, Judge Stevens was not permitted to testify as to matters related in the deposition, but he did not hesitate to say that, as head of the Indian Claims Committee in Congress for the past twelve years, the creation of the Citizenship Court was an outrage on the rights of the Indians, and the action of the court a general public scandal. Judge Stevens being under the jurisdiction of the court, and having originally uttered the charges of corruption against the court, it is being speculated that before he leaves here either Judge Adams or Judge Weaver, who is yet present, may have him arrested for criminal libel.

Defense Closes Case.
The defense closed its case about noon to-day, and the State began at once with the reading of copies of the records of the court in which evidence was taken as to the value of the services rendered to the Indian tribes by their attorneys, Mansfield, McMurray and Cornish, in fixing their fee. It was expected that Judge Adams himself would be the first witness, but it was not so.

Before the defense closed its case the testimony of Judge Bynum that Adams, soon after returning from Oklahoma, told him that he had just cleared $25,000 in a coal land purchase deal, and that he was then worth $50,000, created something of a sensation, in view of Judge Adams's testimony before the magistrate's court that he had made no money outside of his regular salary and practice.

The testimony of ex-Congressman Hackett and ex-Congressman Hemphill, of South Carolina, that Adams's character in Washington and Oklahoma was bad, also produced an impression.

Several depositions were read from parties in Oklahoma and in every instance the character of the court for honesty of opinions was given a bad name.

It is clear from the evidence given by the defense that it hopes to escape conviction by convincing the jury that in publishing charges against the court, and Judge Adams in particular, months after Stevens's speech in Congress and weeks after other papers had published these charges, it was justified in doing so, while the whole Oklahoma atmosphere was permeated with these charges against the court or partially for the law firm which reaped all the harvest of fees and kept 4,000 Indian claimants off the rolls by reason of decisions of the court.

Adams Takes Stand.
After introducing several witnesses who gave Judge Adams a good character, the prosecution this afternoon introduced Judge Adams, whose direct evidence was a full recital of his official acts in Oklahoma. He bitterly denounced Butler, and gave a history of Butler's fight on his last year when he was seeking re-election as state chairman, declaring that after Butler had been unable to induce him by threats to retire, he published the scandalous articles complained of in the Caucasian just a week preceding the State convention.

Judge Adams denied positively every impeaching statement made in the various depositions, and dramatically asserted that he had never received a dishonest dollar in his life. Explaining his statement to Judge Bynum that he had made a great deal of money in a coal deal, he said Judge Bynum must have misunderstood him, since he was trying to promote a big coal deal, but failed in the effort, losing $200. He explained his bank account, stating that in the spring of 1905 he purchased $10,000 worth of property, sold $14,000 worth, and gave mortgages amounting to $12,000.

The cross-examination began at 5 o'clock, court taking recess at 6:30, reconvening at 8, and the session lasted until 11 o'clock. The cross-examination had not been concluded when an adjournment was taken until Monday.

A Model Creamery at Blacksburg

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
BLACKSBURG, VA., April 3.—The farmers of Virginia have been told many times of late by public speakers and through the press that a successful dairy business is the surest foundation of their prosperity. Whether intentional or not, it was carrying out this idea when provision was made for the housing of the V. P. L. creamery in the basement of the agricultural hall. Above it, on the five floors of the large stone building, every division of the Agricultural Department and State experiment station has a place, but the dairy department is the support of them all, structurally speaking at least. After many delays the removal of the creamery from the frame building opposite has been accomplished, and the new quarters give greater facilities not only for handling milk and cream and shipping these products, but for the instruction of students by demonstration and practice of classroom theories.

Four rooms in this basement are taken up with the equipment of the dairy—a separating room, churning room and wash room, pasteurizing room and wash room. There are also two laboratories, two cold storage rooms for butter and one for cheese curing. These, with the ice plant, take up all but one room of the entire floor, one corner room, for the sake of convenience being given over to stock judging, a branch of the department of animal husbandry.

Of the two laboratories, one is for general testing, the other for the use of the professor and superintendent. The farm dairying room, where students are taught daily, contains ten hand separators and a like number of churns, all of the latest make. Work is done by electricity instead of by steam, as heretofore, and all gearing shaft is placed on the floor to avoid possible vibrations affecting other departments in the building. The walls and floors throughout are of cement, the sanitation is perfect, and many windows extending from the floor to the ceiling give ample light and ventilation. The cold storage rooms, connected by underground pipes with the central refrigerating plant at the power house, are proving entirely satisfactory. This system was installed last summer at considerable expense, but this has already been justified in the work of the several departments which it is intended to benefit.

This dairy, started twelve years ago by Professor W. D. Saunders, now State Dairy Commissioner, has proved a source of considerable revenue to the farmers of this section, has been a paying business for the college and has afforded the students unusual opportunity for acquiring a knowledge of the dairy industry at first hand. An average of 600 gallons of milk is brought in every day, and in the spring and summer this reaches a total of 1,200 gallons daily. One man, owner of a large herd, brings a two-horse wagon filled with cans every morning, driving five miles over one of the worst roads in the county; another carries three quarts in a bucket nearly two miles; both receive their checks on the regular monthly pay day of the college. Cream from the dairy is shipped regularly in large quantities to every city in Virginia, Washington, Baltimore and points in North Carolina. Successful shipments have also been made as far west as Indianapolis and south as Florida. The demand for cream far exceeds the supply; for there is a large local trade that must be supplied. W. K. Brainerd, elected by the board last August to succeed W. D. Saunders, is professor of dairy husbandry, and Charles W. Holdaway is the instructor in dairying and superintendent of the creamery.

from an extended stay in Charleston, S. C., stated to-day that he would be a candidate to succeed himself as member of the House of Delegates from Lynchburg.
